INVESTMENT REPORT

FEBRUARY 2022

FUND COMMENTARY

Global equity markets continued to sell off in February. Fears over inflation and interest rate increases – particularly in the US – were major contributors to price declines.

Towards the end of the month, of course, Russian armed forces invaded Ukraine and continue to inflict pain and suffering. These tragic events resulted in strong sanctions against Russian companies, individuals and the central bank – crippling the domestic economy almost overnight. (Montaka does not have any material investments in the region).

The conflict is displacing supplies of energy and food in global markets – further adding to input cost inflation and fears of further monetary tightening.

Purely from an investment perspective, the opportunities that are on offer today are extraordinarily compelling. For many of the world's highest quality businesses, we find their current stock prices to be materially oversold and not reflective of their intrinsic long-term value.

Take Salesforce, for example. In recent days, the business reported an extraordinary set of results with increased guidance of revenue growth and future profitability. Its competitive position continues to strengthen, consensus profit forecasts continue to increase – and yet, its stock price is down by more than 30% in just four months.

Or Meta Platforms (formerly Facebook), which saw its stock decline significantly on announcing its results at the beginning of the month (see our January investment report for more details). Subsequent investigations undertaken over recent weeks continue to support our initial hypothesis that Meta's stock price decline is materially overdone.

Finally, we published Montaka's latest detailed whitepaper on artificial intelligence (AI) and important implications for investors. (Please refer to the March edition of Montaka's Monocle). Based on our analysis, we see the world's leading hyperscalers, including Amazon, Microsoft and Alphabet, as one of the safest and surest ways to profit from AI long-term. This explains why these extraordinary businesses continue to dominate Montaka's top 10 holdings.
