March 2025

Fund Commentary

Global equity markets deepened losses in March. High-beta growth continued the selloff that began in February, roiled by concerns that the Trump administration's policy actions would increase the possibility of a slowdown or even outright recession.

To that point, economic uncertainty has spiked to levels not seen since the 2020 onset of COVID-19, posing new challenges for businesses in near and longer-term project planning. The "Magnificent 7" underperformed the remainder of the MSCI ACWI Index, reversing the trend of significant outperformance, particularly in recent years. Against this backdrop, low-volatility stocks comprised market leadership, while the greatest weakness was felt in Tech and Consumer Discretionary.

For March 2025, the Polen Capital Global Growth Fund (the Fund) declined by 8.14 per cent in Australian Dollars, while the benchmark the MSCI ACWI Net Total Return Index fell by 4.15 per cent in Australian dollars.

The Fund underperformed the benchmark for the period primarily due to weaker security selection in Health Care and Technology, and to a lesser extent, Financials and Consumer Discretionary. From a sector perspective, the Fund's zero exposure to Energy and Utilities, combined with an overweight to Technology, also weighed on relative results.

The top two absolute contributors to performance were CoStar Group and L'Oreal. The bottom three absolute detractors were Amazon, Novo Nordisk, and Oracle.

During the month The Fund initiated new positions in MercadoLibre (leading eCommerce and digital payments provider in Latin America). The Fund also added to its positions in Globant (broad industry pressures have weighed on the stock, increasingly attractive valuation), Novo Nordisk (taking advantage of the recent pullback in shares due to the CagriSema data release – overdone in our view), Airbnb (adding to the position after trimming last year), Adyen (building up new position), and Oracle (opportunistic add on broader market selloff).

The Fund trimmed its positions in Amazon (took down large position on margin), Accenture (source of funding to add to Globant), Abbott Laboratories (source of cash, position remains large), and L'Oreal (source of funds to add to Oracle where we see higher risk-adjusted returns).

Expectations entering 2025 were as high as they have been in some time – marking a stark contrast to the starting points of the past two years. Initial optimism around American exceptionalism has since given way to negative sentiment fuelled by uncertainty provoked by tariffs and other executive actions. The expectations and uncertainty have created a weaker market backdrop for 2025. This environment has been particularly challenging for investors positioned around dominant themes from the past year, such as artificial intelligence (AI) and post-election optimism for an increasingly strong economy. However, Polen Capital do not attempt to tactically position the Fund around emerging themes or short-term macroeconomic conditions. Instead, they remain steadfast in their long-term approach.
